City unveils new website June 3

MURFREESBORO, Tenn. – The City of Murfreesboro will roll out its new and more user-friendly website Monday, City Information Technology Department Director Chris Lilly said.

The URL address will stay the same at <http://www.murfreesborotn.gov>, he said.

More colorful and user-friendly than the previous website, the new one is in many ways designed with residents more in mind.

For example, it will allow individuals to personalize their experiences, according to their own tastes. It will also allow residents to make on-line payments for water and sewer and court fines.

Among the many improvements are a Request Tracker, you can use to report specific city based service requests for issues such as traffic signal defects, potholes, weed and grass violations and others.

A “Notify Me” section where one can ask to be notified by email and/or text when contracts are let for bid, Requests for Proposals are released, city projects are proposed or City alerts are posted.

The site will also notify when and where boards and commissions will meet.

This new notification module can also be used to request information on a variety of city activities and services like specific engineering projects that are underway, CityTV programming schedule and much more.

An events calendar will include community-wide events that residents can sign up to get information on – just follow the dates on the home page to the event you want to see.

The large number of programs and activities offered by Murfreesboro Parks and Recreation Department will also be listed along with times, dates and facilities in which they will be held.

“The new website is designed with residents, our customers, in mind,” Lilly said. “This new website will allow our residents a better means of communication with the City.

“It is their website and they should be able to actively benefit from it,” he added.
