May 'In the City' features 'Better Boro Project', Murfreesboro 2035, more

MURFREESBORO, Tenn. – The May 2015 edition of “In the City,” Murfreesboro’s video magazine show, is airing on CityTV throughout the month. You can also watch this month’s show, featuring a new initiative to help you get fit through the City Parks & Recreation Department’s “Better Boro Project” and the dedication of Gladys Blanton Park, by viewing the YouTube link at <https://youtu.be/lK3U78eO7ok>.

This month’s episode also includes:

- See what you may have missed from the draft Chapter 5 presentation of the Murfreesboro 2035 comprehensive plan on Housing and Neighborhoods, including a look at micro housing and developing downtown neighborhoods.
- The new Spence Creek Watershed Study seeks to enhance water quality of the local stream west of I-24. City Environmental Engineer Sam Huddleston explains the importance of the 3-mile stream to property owners.
- Learn more about ‘Outdoor Murfreesboro’ programs and activities like camping and kayaking at Wilderness Station, where residents connect with nature in Barfield Crescent Park.
- Find out how you can empower yourself to handle violence with Rape, Aggression, Defense (RAD) through self-defense tactics and techniques offered by MPD, June 8-12.
- And take a drive on a new way to train Murfreesboro firefighters in real-world scenarios.

For more information on the “Better Boro Project,” contact Nate Williams at the City Parks & Recreation by calling 615-642-1080 or via e-mail at nwilliams@murfreesborotn.gov.
